Appeal from the Commander for Aid for a Confederate Home.

To the Members of the Grand Army of the

Headquarters Grand Army of the Repub-

My visit was in every respect a delightful

me, but most gratifying of all was the cordial good feeling I found existing between the Union and Confederate saidlers, I affirm without hesitation that among the best rlends of our comrades in the South are the surviving az Confederates. This friendship is based open the mutual respect which one good soldier has for another, and had one good soldler has for another, and had it not been far the bronze button i would often have been unable to distinguish between the bine and the gray, for the cordial welcome extended by the one was squaled by the other. In all my lourney i found no sectional lines, solders of closed doors. One marked contrast, however, distinguishes the surviving solders of the two armies. The National government has properly made generous provision for her defenders, but whatever ald the ex-Confederates receive must come from their more fortunate contrades, or from the musicipalities in which they reside; and while the people of the South have in a split worthy of the highest praise done much to relieve their necessities, the "Nation's wounds' have not yet been fully bound. At the close of the war the Southern people were too impoversioned to make adequate provision for those who suffered from discase and wounds, and the result was that many a Confederate soldler ended bits days in the sims house and was buried in a pauper's grave.

When at Montromery it was my pleasure.

was that many a Confederate soldier ended his days in the aims house and was buried his days in the aims house and was buried his days in the aims house and was buried his a pauper's grave.

When at Montgomery it was my pleasure to meet Colonel J. M. Faikner, district at toward of the first corney for Alabama, formerly an officer in the Elahth Confederate cavalry, who for some time past has been carnestly directing his efforts toward the erection of a Confederate home as Montarian Creek, Chillion county, Alabama. The crection of the first cottage was commenced April 7 instruction for the contage was commenced April 7 instruction for a child. The plan is to build donated by Colonel Falkner, and today two comfortation one of whom could earn a living in a land of planty against the rempetition of a child. The plan is to build forty of these cottages, that many or more being required to accommodate these whose disabilities are total. My purpose in writing this letter, and it is the lan one I shall address to you as commander in the first of the Republic, individually or as posts, an opportunity to contribute to the shelter of these nearly veterous. The dignity of their demeanor and the uncomplaining coldierly way in which they bear suffering and privation, render them worthy of our respect and sympathy, and it becomes a privilege to assist in making their last days comfortable. I know of no saret or shorter way to a complete unification of this country in purpose and feeling than the highway of kind mas, and I believe its extreme outposts abound be jointly held by the surviving soldiers of the armies of Grant and Lee.

There was a time when the nearer we came together the worse it was for all, but now the closer we come together the heter for all.

the power of the surviving soldlers of the

NAVASOTA NEWS NOTES.

Wells Are Being Bored to Furnish Water for Rice. Navasota, Texas. September 1.-Jon

If our esticional contemporary will turn to its Horace, yellow, dog-cared and coversat hoogh it be, the answer to its questiculars may be found. In the first satire of the first book when the immertal writer was parhetically pandering to the J. Pierpent Morgan of that day, Maccenas—as many a less than Horace has been doing ever since, is doing now and will be doing secula sacculorum—be will learn that no man is content with his lot or with what he possesses, but would have some other lot or additional poesessions; and no matter her boundfully he is blessed he is always making the checks of Jupiter swell with indignation by his ingratitude, ite will learn that if is man's nature "to pine hecause his neighbor's she gout bears a more distended udder." There is an unappeasable element of the glution in min that can never be satisfied but which, like the daughters of the horse leech cries "give! Ive!" Or like "Little Oliver" cries "mure." But why compose, or yet paraphrase the master! "Thus the richer man is always an obstacle for the one that is hastening to be rich; as when the courser white along the charict, dismissed from the place of starting, the charloteer pushes at those horses that obstatip his own, despising him that is left behind coming on against the last. Hence it is that we rately find a man who can truly say he has lived happy and content with his past life and when the passible is accomplished the impossible will strive for the fugacious waters that clude his lips.
